

Using Statues as Spiritual Tools for Growth

Statues are very powerful. Immigrants who arrived in the USA by boats in the 20th century felt powerful emotions when seeing the Statue of Liberty for the first time. One visit to the Sphinx in Egypt conjures up thousands of years of civilization. Some statues have been rumored to have magical properties.

There is more to religious statues than strong feelings and a motivation toward piety. Statues serve as spiritual tools. The use of them is a practical spiritual technology that was developed and perfected by Siddha yogis. This technology can be a powerful catalyst for spiritual growth, the manifestation of one's desires and the removal of obstacles that hold you from fulfilling your life's purpose.

Statues Are Bridges to the Subconscious and Superconscious

God can take on many forms. Each form is an aspect of your highest self. There are places within us that are hard to reach directly. We need rituals and tools that allow us access to these places.

For example, Ganesha is the god with the elephant head who is known to remove obstacles in our paths. We can try to be smart and remove our own obstacles to wealth, to healthy relationships or to our next stage of growth. Sometimes this approach works. Other times, we're blocked by a seemingly mysterious force. This force is often the result of repetitive unconscious thought patterns.

Our intellects try to figure out the problem and solve it. We're worried about finding a logical cause that will solve the problem. The problem is that the subconscious mind is much larger than the conscious mind. Ganesha is smarter than we are. He can find the solutions that we can't because he can see everything. He can see the whole problem and fix it without you have to worry about how he will do it. God archetypes like Ganesha will inspire you to do the correct actions that are necessary to realize the effect that you seek.

One spiritual tool that you can use to access Ganesha Consciousness is a statue. It can be a pocket-size statue or it can be 12 feet tall. By working with three-dimensional representations of Ganesha or other archetypes of higher consciousness, God comes alive.

Statues Are Spiritual Tools That Channel Love

What connects your consciousness with the divine qualities of Ganesha? Love. It's very simple.

Radha is the consort to Krishna. She had such unconditional love for Krishna that he allowed her to merge with him and become eternally inseparable from him. She is eternally in a state of love and bliss, the highest honor Krishna could give. Symbolically, Krishna is God. Radha is the devotee.

Because it's difficult to see God, we can use spiritual tools like statues to access that consciousness. With a statue, you can lovingly connect with a tangible object to make this process easier.

Treat Your Statues with Love

The most practical and portable way to use this powerful spiritual technology is to buy a small statue that you can fit in your pocket. Quartz is best because it amplifies thought. Take care of it like a loving parent. Find a pouch to keep it in. Offer tulsi (Holy Basil) leaves and place them at the feet of the statue as the Siddhas do. Clean it if it gets dirty.

One powerful way to connect with God is to place a large life-size statue in your home. The size will make your statue much more noticeable. You will never forget the powerful medicine when you're in that room.
